In a statement, ...ican Jewish Congress ...ated that anti-Semi... ...forces aimed at the ex... ...of the Jewish people no ...ronted a major problem ...free world. This "deep... ...ns in Jewish life" is one ...of the unprecedented free... ...Jews enjoy under democracy, ...said.

"The destiny of the Jewish people depends on how well it can meet this challenge of freedom," Dr. Prinz declared. He urged the calling of a national conference on Jewish survival at which Jewish leaders in every field would be able to contribute their thinking, their organizational ability, and their material resources toward a solution of "the most urgent task of contemporary Jewry." Dr. Prinz spoke at the first fall meeting of the national executive committee of the American Jewish Congress, meeting in Stephen Wise Congress House, 15 East 84 Street. The AJCongress president reported on the meeting of the World Jewish Congress in Geneva, Switzerland, attended by representatives of Jewish communities from 29 countries. He said the American delegation to the meeting was struck by the fact that free Jewish communities around the world faced the same problem of assimilation and eventual disintegration of Jewish life, jeopardizing their future existence.

"Reports from countries as far apart as India and Argentina made it clear that the Jewish people have entered a completely new era in history," Dr. Prinz declared. "Jewish communities in the free world no longer fear that they might be physically wiped out by a militant anti-Semitism or that their governments would condone anti-Jewish persecution. Today Jews in democratic lands enjoy the same equality and freedom guaranteed to all citizens, but it is precisely this enjoyment of liberty and the successful integration of Jewish communities that pose today's central problem of the Jewish people, the problem of survival under freedom."

Dr. Prinz added: "We returned from the international deliberations in Geneva with the profound conviction that unless the Jews of the world address themselves to this problem with all seriousness, the future of the Jewish people is in question." Dr. Prinz, formerly rabbi of the Berlin, Germany, Jewish community during the Hitler era and now leader of Temple Bnai Abraham, of Newark, N. J., said that the problem of Jewish survival affects not only remote little communities abroad but also the 5,500,000 Jews of the United States, who comprise the world's largest Jewish community.

"We must call upon the Jewish community of America to mobilize every possible resource that would help guarantee the future existence of a creative Jewish people," Dr. Prinz declared. He said the first step in such a process

Bnai Brith Asks $2,500,000 Assets Seized By Hitler

Bnai Brith, the Jewish service organization, made public a restitution claim against the Federal Republic of West Germany for portable assets seized by the Nazis in 1937 and valued at $2,500,000. Details of the claim were outlined in a memorandum which Philip M. Klutznick, of Park Forest, Ill., president of the 115-year old body, presented to the West German embassy in Washington, D. C. In the absence of the German Ambassador, in Bonn, Germany, Mr. Klutznick met with Dr. Franz Krapf, West Germany's minister to the United States, to discuss the matter.

The memorandum proposed a single "global settlement" covering the individual claims of more than 100 Bnai Brith lodges that were active in 84 cities in Germany until the Bnai Brith movement in that country was forcibly dissolved as "inimical" to the Nazi state. Mr. Klutznick said that restitution proceeds would be earmarked "to help reestablish the shattered communal lives of former German members of Bnai Brith now living in Israel and South America, and to permit the reopening of Bnai Brith in West Germany."

Earlier this year, Bnai Brith received an application from the leaders of West Berlin's Jewish community for reconstituting a lodge there. The matter has been held in abeyance, Mr. Klutznick said, awaiting consideration of the restitution claim. Chancellor Konrad Adenauer first urged Bnai Brith return to Germany in a meeting with Mr. Klutznick in Bonn in 1956. The Bnai Brith memorandum recited the fact that the assets of the organization's German affiliates were seized by a government decree issued on April 10, 1937, by the office of Heinrich Himmler as Reichsfuehrer SS (Elite Guard) and by the chief of German police in the Reich Ministry of the Interior.

Nine days later the Gestapo sent an order to the late Rabbi Leo Baeck, president of Bnai Brith in Germany, affirming the forced dissolution and confiscating all Bnai Brith property "irrespective of where such property may be located." This included "all realty, all personal property, accounts receivable, bank accounts, postal accounts, etc." Simultaneously, the Gestapo arrested some 80 leading Bnai Brith members in Berlin and about 70 others in the provinces and had their homes searched as part of the general seizure.

The restitution claim involves only the movable assets that were confiscated and not the large amount of real property, including many lodge houses, a Berlin headquarters building, and various orphanages and old age homes which were part of the Bnai Brith service program in Germany. The buildings it owned have been returned to Bnai Brith, but in most instances as bombed out rubble. The Bnai Brith memorandum pointed out that the Nazi confiscation, in addition to seizing cash, bank accounts, and security holdings, also carried off expensive furnishings, carpeting, valuable paintings, extensive libraries, organs, kitchen and dining room equipment and similar property.

On the basis of affidavits from Bnai Brith members who survived the Nazi holocaust, as well as a 1930 inventory of the assets of 185 German lodges, the organization, oldest and largest Jewish service group in the world, declared: "It is estimated that the total value of all the Bnai Brith movable assets will not exceed 10 million Deutsche Marks. A reasonable valuation can be determined more precisely by qualified appraisers acceptable to the Federal Republic."

The Bnai Brith claim was filed under a West German federal restitution law (BRuG) enacted July 19, 1957, which authorizes a maximum of 1.5 billion Deutsche marks to settle claims against the Reich and its related agencies. The law provides for adjudication by local German courts in the areas where confiscations took place, but also permits "global settlements" wherever the latter would be a more equitable method. Bnai Brith explained it was seeking redress for its German members through a "global settlement" to eliminate "the legal confusion of possibly 500 separate court suits." In its memorandum it proposed that: "In cooperation with the Ministry of Finance an attempt be made to find a key or common denominator which will give a fair estimate of the values confiscated and will permit a speedy global settlement rather than protracted and expensive litigation." To date, Mr. Klutznick said, Bnai Brith has received less than $10,000 in small restitution settlements from various Land (state) courts.

Founded in 1843 in New York, Bnai Brith expanded overseas with the establishment of a Berlin lodge in 1882. The German affiliate involved almost 20,000 Jewish families and its members included leaders in religion, business, science, and education at the time of its forced dissolution. Its leader, Rabbi Baeck, was also Chief Rabbi of Berlin and head of the World Union of Progressive Judaism (Reform). A champion of German Jewry, he openly defied Hitler and calmly turned his back on all offers of escape from the Nazis.

Hitler first ordered Bnai Brith to disband in 1933, but Dr. Baeck refused. He told Nazi officials that the movement would never surrender voluntarily its program of service and philanthropy to German Jewry. He remained as president until the day in 1937 when storm troopers marched into Bnai Brith headquarters in Berlin and seized the property. Dr. Baeck survived as a concentration camp inmate. He died in London in November, 1956, at the age of 83 years. The West German government recently issued a postage stamp honoring Dr. Baeck.

Editor Of London Yiddish Labor Paper Was Not A Jew

Rudolph Rocker, a writer whose social ideals caused him to spend much of his life outside his native Germany, died in his home at 258 Riverside Drive, New York. He was 86 years old. His son, Fermin, survives.

Mr. Rocker's principal historical work, "Nationalism and Culture," has been published in several editions in German, Spanish, English and Chinese. A recent work of his in English, published in 1949 while he was living in the U.S., is "Pioneers of American Freedom." This has had a wide circulation in Germany, Latin America, and elsewhere.

Mr. Rocker was an eloquent speaker, says the New York Times. In his writings and speeches, he held that where freedom prevails, genius and the welfare of men are abundant; when social power is centralized in the hands of a few, genius suffers and economic distress ensues.

In early life, Mr. Rocker had been active in the Socialist movement in Germany and was a disciple of Prince Peter Kropotkin, the Russian writer and revolutionary. He went to London, where, although he had been a Roman Catholic, he learned Yiddish. For many years before World War I he was editor in London of the Yiddish newspaper Der Arbeiter Freund (The Worker's Friend) and of a literary monthly, Germinal.

During World War I Mr. Rocker was interned as an alien enemy. He wrote an account of this experience, "Behind Barbed Wire and Bars." Later he wrote "The Six," a poetic treatment of six philosophies of life, based on lectures he had delivered to his fellow internees.

Mr. Rocker returned to Germany after the war, but when Hitler came into power, he barely escaped, leaving behind all of his belongings except the manuscript of "Nationalism and Culture."

His other works include a three volume autobiography. An excerpt from this, "The London Years," narrating his experiences in the British labor movement and in Yiddish labor activities, has been published separately in English, says the New York Times. He also wrote a book on the Spanish Civil War, "The Tragedy of Spain."

N. Y. Health Expert Says Infant Death Rate In Israel Due To Inferior Food Care

A "remarkable" improvement in the general health of Israel's population since the country's birth ten years ago was cited by an authority on health. Dr. Morris Greenberg, director of the New York City Health Department's Bureau of Preventable Diseases, said Israel was rapidly gaining health standards equal to more advanced nations, says the New York Times. He attributed the Israeli citizens' increasing awareness of health and sanitation aids to health centers situated throughout the country.

Dr. Greenberg recently returned from a two-week tour of Israeli health institutions. The centers he particularly cited are those in the villages. In 1957, he said, there were 518 in 900 villages. But these, he said, while offering advanced medical education and care, have not overcome one of Israel's major medical problems — her infant and child death rate.

Dr. Greenberg said that while Israel's infant death rate was "lower than anywhere else in the Middle East and constantly decreasing," the rate was still 35 in 1,000. The rate in the United States is 24 in 1,000.

Infant deaths, he said, are caused mostly by diarrhea. The rate of death among young children from infectious diseases like diphtheria, whooping cough and dysentery is also high, Dr. Greenberg said. The causes, Dr. Greenberg said, lie on continuingly inferior methods of food preservation and incomplete milk pasteurization.

With refrigeration scarce and expensive and the temperature high, food is not kept fresh, he told the New York Times, and only 70 per cent of the milk is pasteurized. Water is "pretty well" treated in most areas, he said.

The country's Arab population, approximately 10 per cent of the whole, has somewhat lowered the general health standards because of a higher incidence of infectious diseases among Arab immigrants.

There has been no great incidence of poliomyelitis since the introduction of Salk or similar vaccines, he said, but an improved program for the 5,800 persons afflicted in a 1950 epidemic has had to be established.

Dr. Greenberg said he had visited Israel as a guest of the Hebrew University in Jerusalem as a member of its medical advisory board.

Her gown was of ivory-coloured silk peau de soie, designed with a fitted bodice entirely worked in seed-pearl-beads and iridescent sequins. From the side front hem harem panels were draped to the back forming the effect of a court train. For the reception the train was replaced by a bow ending in panels to the floor. Her finger-tip veil of tulle illusion was arranged with a coronet of seed-pearl beads, and she carried a cascade of large white orchids and ivy. Mrs. Kenneth Nash, of Pittsfield, Mass., cousin of the bride, was matron of honour. Her gown was emerald-green satin; with scooped neckline and a draped bow at the waist. For those who are planning a trip overseas, a medical and dental check-up is a good precaution. Eye glasses are easily lost or broken, so a second pair is a good idea when travelling. A sufficient supply of any medicine that must be taken regularly or a copy of the prescription will prove useful.

Wonderful New Hand-Book, "Say It In Yiddish", Costs Only 75 Cents

The editors of Dover Publications, 920 Broadway, New York, first decided to publish "Say It In Yiddish" in 1957 when a young Hungarian who had escaped during the rebellion was hired for the mail room. The boy spoke no English and no one at Dover spoke Hungarian. On the first day it was discovered that besides Hungarian, he could also speak Yiddish. From then on whenever anyone wanted to give the boy directions he would have to call one of the pressmen at Dover who spoke Yiddish. The pressman would be told what was wanted and then he would repeat the directions in Yiddish to the young Hungarian. After a month the boy had picked up enough English to make this no longer necessary.

The incident made the editor of Dover's "Say It" series aware of Yiddish as an important language of communication, and it was decided to include a Yiddish phrase book in the series. The series, which now includes French, Spanish, Dutch, Japanese, and 13 other languages, has achieved worldwide recognition as the most modern and ambitious series of phrase books now being published. The publisher plans to eventually include a phrase book for every important spoken language in the world.

A little research disclosed that most previously published phrase books have approached Yiddish as a humorous dialect, replete with curse words, vulgarisms and other forms of "Yankee Yiddish". To the publisher's knowledge this is the first phrase book that Treats Yiddish with dignity and as a world language. The publisher hopes that its circulation may undo some of the harm that has been created by the widespread comic approach to a language so important in every day communication and in the development of Jewish culture. The publisher is aware that this serious approach is much less salable than the comic approach, but he hopes the support of the Jewish-American press through publicity will create channels of interest that have never been reached before. This small book is big far out of proportion to its price: seventy-five cents.

It is often possible to get rid of a cold by home treatment but some forms of this common disease require a doctor's care. A chill or fever, with shortness of breath, and with signs of blood in coughed-up material should have medical care and the patient should remain in bed until the doctor has diagnosed the case.

Transformations In Israel

SUMMARY OF ADDRESS TO THE UNITED JEWISH APPEAL CONVENTION IN JERUSALEM

BY PRIME MINISTER DAVID BEN GURION

The great majority of the people of Israel were not here ten years ago, and very few of them worked on the land or in the mines or factories. The first thing we had to do was to bring about an economic and social transformation among the new immigrants, so as to fit them to live independently, making everything for themselves like any other people, and looking after their own safety and security.

But this was not all. There was also a second transformation. Here we had Jews coming from more than seventy different countries, speaking scores of different languages, brought up in different cultures, and we had to give them a common national language. Other peoples—the Indians and the Irish for example—have tried to do it, but without success. We in Israel—and I believe we are the only people in our time to achieve this cultural miracle—have given back to our people its ancient language, which many thought was dead or only a language of books, and today they speak their own language—Hebrew.

We still, however, have many things to do. Some of them may seem fantastic, but during my life in Israel—a little more than 51 years—things have been done which great experts and very practical people told us were impossible. And yet they were done, and when we are told now, "No, you cannot do this," we go on doing it.

The first thing we have to do—and it is a terribly difficult thing—is to conquer our desert. Sixty per cent of our country is desert. There are bigger deserts in America, but the Americans can afford to have deserts, because they have plenty of fertile land and great rivers. We cannot afford to have deserts. We are determined to turn the desert into arable and cultivable land for many more Jews who will come from many countries, though I cannot say how long it will take. We will have to do it by bringing the waters of the Jordan in the North to the South, and by finding a cheap process for distilling sea water for irrigation.

We will have to discover and to utilize all the desert's hidden natural resources: copper, iron, gypsum, granite and the riches of the Dead Sea. We will have to develop atomic power in the South and the North, near the Dead Sea and near the Mediterranean, to provide our growing agriculture and industry with new sources of power. Our scientists are trying—not without success—to utilize that greatest source of energy in our world—solar energy, for in the Negev we have sun almost throughout the year.

We will have to build towns there, as we have already begun to do, for artisans and industrial workers, because we cannot settle the Negev only through agriculture. We will have to build a larger pipeline from the Red Sea to the Mediterranean. We are the only country in the Middle East with an alternative to the Suez Canal. Last year, after the Sinai Campaign, we built a small pipeline, and the oil is flowing from Eilat to the Mediterranean.

But we are determined to build a large pipeline, which will not

The Ribbon Of Haganah Goes To Thousands Of The Former Underground In Israel

BY MORRIS PEARLMAN, BROADCASTING OVER KOL ZION LAGOLAH, IN ISRAEL

An unusual ceremony took place in Jerusalem recently, attended by leaders in every walk of life in Israel and by representative groups throughout the land who played a key part in shaping the destiny and pattern of the country. It was a ceremony at which the Prime Minister, David Ben-Gurion, awarded the ribbon of Hagamah to thousands of men and women who had been members of the underground Jewish self-defence movement in the years which led up to the creation of the State of Israel.

In the large stadium of the Capital, carved out of the Judean hills the Prime Minister, flanked by the Chief of Staff of the Israel Defence Forces and the former leaders of the Jewish defence movement, addressed the thousands of by now almost middle-aged men and women — and some past middle-age — who had in fact helped to fashion the key instrument in the liberation of a people and the achievement of Israel independence.

Haganah was in many ways unique. It was formed in the days shortly after the first World War, when the country was being administered by a British Mandatory Government. Jewish pioneers had established several farming villages in remote areas. They were subject to attacks by Arab bands. Communication between Jewish towns and agricultural settlements was never safe from ambush and surprise raids. The Mandatory Administration never had enough security forces — army and police — to defend every Jewish outpost. Some say they were not acutely concerned with the problem since several key local officials tended to be pro-Arab.

If Jewish life and settlement were to be defended, it had to be done by the Jews themselves. They could rely on no one else. So they founded the Jewish self-defence movement, known as Haganah in Hebrew.

But since the Mandatory Administration officially barred all arms carrying, Haganah had to go underground. No member of Haganah could officially proclaim the fact, for to do so would mean arrest and imprisonment. As the years went by Arab attacks mounted. In areas where Haganah was strong, attacks were repelled and the Jews survived. Where it was weak, Jews were massacred.

Haganah established the powerful principle, vital with every nation, that a people had to rely on themselves alone for their survival. They became a people's force, with almost every able-bodied man and woman a member of Haganah, trained in secret in the use of arms and the art of battle. When World War II broke out, many of them joined the British forces to fight Hitler. When later a Jewish Brigade Group was formed to fight alongside the Allies most of its fighting members were Haganah veterans.

After the war they became even more distinctive as an underground force when they assumed responsibility for the rescue of Jewish survivors from Nazi Europe and bringing them to Palestine, in the teeth of Britain's anti-immigration policy and in defiance of the blockade of the Royal Navy. Haganah men and women went to Europe to organise Jewish escape routes, and to man the so-called illegal immigrant ships that brought them through the Mediterranean. This was unique in an underground resistance movement. For it was what could be called "constructive resistance" — defying the inhuman policy of the authorities by rescuing and saving lives.

When the State of Israel was proclaimed in 1948, it was attacked within a matter of hours by the combined armies of the neighbouring Arab states. Without Haganah and its training, discipline, and public spirit, the Arab attack would have succeeded. But Haganah flung itself into the breach. The results are a glorious chapter in Israel's history. In the midst of the battle for Israel's independence the Haganah formally became the Army of Israel. And ever since, every outstanding commander of the army, navy or airforce has been a Haganah veteran.

But not all Haganah veterans today are young enough to be members of the regular defence services. They are to be found in all spheres of activity, in medicine and the law, professors and teachers, factory owners and factory workers, farm labourers and pioneers settlers, shop-keepers and members of parliament. All share a proud record of public service and courage. All had a part in the achievement of Israel's independence. It is good that the State of Israel, in its Tenth Anniversary Year, should have paid formal tribute to its brave sons and daughters.

The Jewish Festival Of Sukkos Is The Source Of The American Thanksgiving

The Jewish Festival of Tabernacles began at sundown, September 28. Known in Hebrew as Sukkos, the holiday commemorates the manner in which the ancient Israelites lived in the desert during their travels from Egyptian bondage towards the Land of Promise. Because of their belief that they were kept alive by divine providence, the Jews of Biblical days ordained the holiday as a time of thanksgiving to God. Later, when Palestine was settled, Sukkos became a time of gratitude for the autumn harvest. It is referred to in the Biblical Book of Exodus (verse 16 of chapter 23) as the Festival of Ingathering.

Sukkos is observed by special prayer services in home, synagogue, and religious school. Booths containing the fruits and greenery of the fall season are built near homes and in temples and special blessings of thanks for the beauty and bounty of nature are recited in them. Sermons, liturgy, and music stress the theme of gratitude. The American Thanksgiving holiday was deliberately patterned after Sukkos by the Scripture-minded Pilgrims.

Traditional Jews observe Sukkos for nine days; liberal Jews, for eight. Among both groups the final day is given over the rejoicing over the Torah, divine teachings which came to the Israelites during their desert wanderings. On the last day, known as Simchas Torah, the Joy of the Torah, the cycle of readings from the Pentateuch is completed with the last verses of Deuteronomy and immediately resumed with the beginning of Genesis. The music for Simchas Torah, as well as the mood in the Synagogue, is extremely lively.

Characteristic of the Sukkos ritual is the passage from the Union Prayerbook: "Thy bounty, O Lord, provides for all the needs of man if he be wise and understanding in the use of Thy blessings. Teach us then to employ Thy gifts for the happiness of all Thy children. Let there be no famine or scarcity in any household or in any land. As soil and rain and sun unite to do Thy will, so unify the hearts of Thy children to fulfil Thy command to live together in mutual blessing. Spread over us the tabernacle of peace and brotherhood, now and evermore. Amen."

The above was prepared by the commission on information about Judaism of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations and Central Conference of American Rabbis.

One of America's favorite festivals, Thanksgiving Day, came into being because the Pilgrim Fathers felt such a close attachment to the Bible that they modelled their day of gratitude after an ancient Jewish practice. The holiday of Sukkos, still celebrated by Jews throughout the world, was the forerunner of the Thanksgiving holiday. When Jews gather in homes and synagogues during the period of the Sukkos holiday, they will be taking part in observances dating back to Biblical days which had a strong impact upon the early settlers of America.

Sukkos is Hebrew for "tents" or "tabernacles," and the holiday, which is featured by the construction of leafy booths near homes and in synagogues, recalls the manner in which the liberated slaves lived during their forty years of wandering towards the Promised Land. Sukkos is essentially, therefore, a holiday of thanks to God for His care. The Pilgrims regarded themselves as latter-day Israelites. They saw many parallels between their experiences and those of the Jews of old. Like the Israelites, they groaned under the oppression of English tyranny. Like them, they resolved to flee the scene of their torment. Like them, they ventured on a trackless journey. Like them, their destination was a land of promise. And when, like the ancient Israelites, the pilgrims endured a hard year and later enjoyed the benefits of better times, they instituted a festival of thanksgiving patterned after the Biblical original.

Another interesting footnote to the source of America's Thanksgiving Day is the choice of day on which the holiday should occur. Because the Pilgrims wanted Thanksgiving to be celebrated by the adherents of all faiths as a separate holiday, they decided to avoid Sunday, the Christian Sabbath, and Saturday, the Jewish Sabbath, and even Friday, the Moslem Sabbath, and chose Thursday instead. On Thursday, the partisans of all the religions could join in a common outpouring of gratitude which would not interfere with their weekly Sabbath devotions.

J. W. B. Helped U. S. Jews In Services To Greet New Year At Sea And Everywhere

Jewish Marines, sailors, and airmen with the U.S. forces in Lebanon had full opportunity to greet the Jewish New Year, 5719, and take part in Rosh Hashonah services, thanks to emergency arrangements set up by the National Jewish Welfare Board (JWB), sponsor of global "Operation New Year" for the military in the U.S. and in 85 overseas lands. A Jewish chaplain, flown overseas to conduct New Year services for personnel of the U.S. Sixth Fleet in the Mediterranean, also officiated at services for the Marines and sailors in Lebanon.

Large quantities of kosher foods and sundry religious supplies have been dispatched by JWB to supplement the supplies carried by the first task force of the Sixth Fleet which came to the Middle East in July. Shipments of religious supplies to Lebanon (a large supply was shipped recently to the area at the behest of the Army) are part of JWB's global arrangements through which religious services have been organized at 850 posts and veterans' hospitals in the U.S., and in Europe, Africa, Greenland, Alaska, the Pacific and the Far East.

Taking part in "Operation New Year" are 370 full and part-time Jewish chaplains, the whole USO-JWB field staff and some 10,000 JWB Armed Services volunteers. A member of USO, JWB is authorized to serve the religious and morale needs of Jewish servicemen. It also recruits, endorses, and serves Jewish chaplains.

Chaplain Manfred Rechtschaffen, Air Force Jewish chaplain in Tripoli, North Africa, has been going between his post in Libya and Lebanon for the past few weeks to take care of the New Year needs of Jewish troops in Lebanon. Rabbis who made long flights on similar New Year missions included Rabbi Selwyn Geller, of Princeton, N.J., who went to Guantanamo Bay, Cuba; Rabbi Abraham Avrech, New York, who flew to Iceland; Rabbi Harvey Tattlebaum, of Mount Vernon, N.Y., who officiated in Bermuda, and Rabbi Lavy Becker, of Montreal, who led the worship in Labrador. Rabbi Nathan Witkin, USO-JWB staffer in the Canal Zone, who flew 10,000 miles to U.S. stations in the Caribbean, conducted services at the USO-JWB club in Balboa. In Alaska, Chaplain Joshua Wachtfogel, solo Jewish chaplain in the area, conducted services in Anchorage, and also saw to High Holy Day arrangements in Fairbanks. Lending a hand in Fairbanks was Robert Kirsch, the new USO-JWB worker, and the local JWB Armed Services Committee.

GIs in the Far East saluted the New Year at central points and at remote stations in Japan and Korea. Services in Korea, where hundreds gathered in Ascom City, Seoul, from all interior posts, included a New Year message to the troops by Chaplain Sherwin Wine. This talk was broadcast to the States and carried by "Monitor", network program of the National Broadcasting Company. Services in the Far East were typical of those held in the Philippines, Hawaii, Guam, and Okinawa. In the latter place, an SOS from Chaplain Aaron Kranse to JWB for a shofar was relayed to JWB via ham radio and immediately dispatched. The notes of the shofar were also heard in Germany, France, England, and Italy, where the USO-JWB staffer in Naples was busy seeing to the needs of Jewish personnel passing through Naples en route to the Middle East.

The time-honored greeting, "May You Be Inscribed for a Good Year", was heard on all ships at sea during the High Holy Days, at remote Arctic Dew Line stations; at missile, Nike, and radar sites; in ancient, overseas synagogues; and even in USO clubs in the U.S.; and overseas in Fairbanks, Alaska, Naples, Italy, and Balboa, Canal Zone. In the U.S., the Lebanon crisis brought new responsibilities to the Jewish chaplains and the USO-JWB staff serving in the Virginia and North Carolina areas, where marines and sailors embarked for overseas. David Zwerdling, USO-JWB area worker in Virginia, along with chaplains Charles Mintz, of the Norfolk Naval Base, Virginia, and Isaac Lubin, of Fort Eustis, worked virtually round the clock to assure the stocking of the ships leaving for the Middle East with High Holy Day supplies.

JWB committees pitched in with a variety of personal and morale services that were needed by GI families when the head of the family was suddenly whisked off to put out the fires in Lebanon. JWB committees in addition made preparation for religious and morale services at all missile, Nike, and AAA sites in the U.S. and got set for such New Year projects as home hospitality, visits to hospital wards, gift distribution, and break-the-fast dinners.

New Year services and hospitality were much in evidence in most Veterans Administration hospitals, where Jewish chaplains conducted services for the ambulatory patients. In some hospitals where chaplains were not present, recordings of the New Year services were played over the public address systems. The recordings were furnished by the JWB Women's Organizations' Division. Extensive visitation and gifts distribution marked the work of JWB committees in many V. A. hospitals.

only provide for our needs but will free Europe from the dictatorship of Egypt. We must build a deep-water port, which will one day be a great international port, at Eilat, to connect our country with the two great continents of Asia and Africa.

We shall not only have to conquer the Negev desert—we shall also have to conquer more of the sea. When I came to Israel there was not a single Jewish worker in the ports, not a single Jewish sailor. Now we already have three ports worked exclusively by Jews, we have scores of ships — cargo and passenger, and we are determined to become a great maritime power. It was not the English or the Dutch—the greatest maritime powers in the last three hundred years—who discovered navigation. It was a Hebrew tribe, three thousand years ago, who used to be called Phoenicians—but in Hebrew they are called Zidonim, after a town which is now in Lebanon. They were the first to navigate the entire African continent. What they could do 3,000 years ago, we certainly can do now.

We have a small country, but the sea is big. The land is divided among the nations, but the sea is free, and our sea is unlimited. It starts from Haifa and Jaffa and it goes on to Tokyo and San Francisco, and from Eilat to India and South Africa. And just as our people for many centuries never tilled the land and have yet become exemplary farmers, so they can also become—and to a certain extent have become—good sailors, and Jewish ships sail the seven seas.

We must prepare ourselves for the great day—which will certainly come, although none of us can say when—when the gates of a great empire, where we have the second-greatest Jewish community in the world—Russian Jewry—will be opened, and hundreds of thousands of them will come to Israel. We must make all the necessary preparations for the coming of that great day, so that when they come we may be able to receive them and settle them.

But our people, like any other, cannot live on bread alone. History did not pamper the Jewish people. We were always a small people, in ancient times as now. We were not given a large country; we were not given great natural riches. But Providence endowed us with as great intellectual and moral qualities as any people in the world, and we must utilize these qualities to the maximum. We are determined to make Israel into one of the greatest centres of learning and research, and a number of international scientific congresses have been held here in which the greatest scientists of the world have taken part.

Until Israel was reborn, the Jewish genius was anonymous. You know what Jews have contributed in America to develop atomic power, but they are Americans. You know what Einstein said when he first gave out his great revolutionary theory of relativity. He said: "If my theory proves a success, the Germans will say: He is a German, and the French will say: He is a great man. And if it is a mistake, the Germans will say: He is a Jew, and the French: He is a German."

Here in Israel we have put an end to Jewish anonymity. Here we are simply Jews. And what is done by our scientists here sheds lustre not only on Israel but on all the Jews throughout the world, just as the heroism of our young army enhanced the prestige of all the Jews in the world. So our centres of learning and science will bring pride and increased self-respect to all Jews.

We have two great tasks to perform. We want to build in Israel a safe, free and independent homeland for every Jew in the world who wishes or needs to come over. And secondly, we have to build here a high standard of civilization in a new society, which will be the pride of all the Jews in the world. These two tasks are not easy, and we will perhaps not achieve them in a few years, but I am certain that with the combined efforts of the people of Israel and Jewry throughout the world we will accomplish these two tasks in full in our time.

A. J. C. HEAD

would be the calling of a national conference on Jewish survival to focus attention on the problem and to begin the task of meeting it. To this conference, Jewish religious figures, scholars, educators, social scientists, and communal leaders would bring their special skills and experience in an effort to analyze the problem of Jewish cultural survival and draw plans for meeting it, Dr. Prinz proposed.

Dr. Prinz said that anti-Semitism and the suppression of Jewish communal life behind the Iron Curtain remains a "deeply felt problem" of world Jewry. He noted that current estimates indicate some 3,500,000 Jews live in the Soviet Union and in Eastern European countries within the Soviet orbit.

"These Jews, too, face extinction as a religious and cultural entity," Dr. Prinz asserted. "But their problem is caused not by indifference from within but by suppression from without, by the active efforts of the Communist regime to discourage Jewish identification. It is a vital task of Jews in the free world to continue their efforts aimed at securing for Jews in Soviet-dominated lands the right to continue their Jewish traditions and to insure their continuity as part of the Jewish people."
